DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Schlosnagle Farm is located on Everly Road in the vicinity of Bear Creek. The farm includes a house, barn, and several frame outbuildings.

The house is a two-story, gable-roofed log dwelling with a three-bay, center-door facade. The facade points SE. The NE gable end is one bay wide and the SW gable end is two bays wide. A one story, hipped-roofed porch runs the length of the facade. A one-story, gable-roofed kitchen addition extends from the S end of the NW elevation. A one-story ell porch runs along the NW elevation of the main block and the NE elevation of the addition. The NW end of the ell porch on the addition has been filled in to create a storage room.

The house rests on a coursed stone foundation. The E corner of the foundation displays squared, dressed quoins. The log walls are covered with German siding; the type of notching used is unknown. The windows are two over two sash with plain board surrounds. The ends of the window heads are cut in an ogee outline, and another similarly cut board has been placed below each windowsill. The roof is covered with corrugated metal.

The house has three chimneys. A metal-covered interior chimney is placed at the ridgeline, SW of center on the main block, and an exterior cinderblock chimney is placed forward of the ridgeline on the SW gable end. At the gable end of the rear addition is an interior brick chimney. The porch roof is supported by four chamfered posts. The interior of the house has a central staircase, but is otherwise unknown.

The site also contains a frame barn, frame springhouse, and several frame outbuildings. To the NE is a cave or root cellar, which has been rebuilt with concrete block.
